GAUDALUPE COLLEGE

The following interesting story is taken from the Seguin Bulletin:

A short visit to Gaudalupe College last Tuesday evening, at a time when every body was busy in the activities that go with commencement week, brought somewhat of a revelation to the editor of The Bulletin.

A casual inspection of the various papers in the literary department showed that there is in vogue there a systematic method of training, and the work exhibited marked neatness and accuracy.

In the sewing department there is an elaborate display of the art of dressmaking and fancy work that would require the feminine hand to give ample description; but we understood it well enough to see that the predominant idea is this as well as the other departments of the College is not only to teach the theory as to how things are done, but to teach the pupils to do them.

And herein lies the future success of Gaudalupe College.

While we were there a demonstration was given in the College Chapel where a large number of visitors, including the trustees of the institution and prominent Negroes from various portions of the state, had assembled.

There was an exhibit of products of the College farm and truck gardens. The class in cooking gave a demonstration of bread baking and candy making, and papers were read on modern housekeeping, sanitary care of the kitchen, etc. that were interesting and showed thorough training.

The College is located on its own farm of about 300 acres, about two miles from Seguin, and the buildings are valued at about $250,000. These buildings are substantially built and kept in splendid condition. Sanitation is one of the watch words and an idea of its degree can be gathered from the fact that during the influenza epidemic of last winter the school was not affected at all.

The plan of education here is similar to that of the famous Tuskegee, and being a man of rare talents and sound judgment, he has felt his way toward making this college a replica of the famous Tuskegee.

By his thorough business methods he has won the respect and confidence of the Texas Colored Baptist Association, as well as that of the merchants and bankers of Seguin. Under his leadership the school has adopted the "pay as you go" policy.

In connection with the industrial department the boys are taught the importance of soil properties as well as plant culture. Prof. Washington believes that the best place on earth is the farm, and that with the growing use of intelligent methods farm life will gradually become even more pleasant and profitable.

The school also teaches carpentry and cabinet making and has a hat making department that is an important feature.

Gaudalupe College is destined to become one of the greatest Negro institutions of learning in the United States—Seguin Bulletin.
